Moodboard

The designed hallway space is conceived as a quiet study zone within the library, offering users the option to rent a workspace for long-term study or focused work, even for the entire day. The concept is based on the idea of individual and shared cells that provide sufficient privacy, acoustic comfort, and ergonomic support without disrupting the flow of traffic in the hallway. The space is divided into a narrower and a wider hallway, with each responding to different user needs—ranging from individual work to studying in pairs or smaller groups. The color scheme of the cells in shades of yellow, blue, and green supports orientation in the space while contributing to a friendly, stress-free atmosphere suitable for long-term stays.

Materials

The material solution of the study cells emphasizes a combination of functionality, acoustic comfort, and visual lightness. The foundation consists of acoustic panels that separate individual cells and ensure the necessary privacy during work or study. These panels are complemented by perforated metal walls that allow light and air to pass through without disrupting the feeling of separation. The furniture is designed predominantly in a combination of wood and metal—height-adjustable desks allow for working while sitting or standing, while metal lockable lockers provide secure storage space for personal belongings and valuables. Soft seating in the form of armchairs and upholstered panels brings an element of comfort and relaxation to the space, which is especially important during long-term use.

Floor plan layout

The furniture layout is designed with a view to clear spatial organization and variability of use. In the narrower hallway, there is a total of seven individual cells, each equipped with a height-adjustable desk, an ergonomic office chair, a lockable metal locker, and an armchair intended for relaxation. This arrangement allows for a seamless transition between working and resting positions throughout the day. In the wider hallway, three larger cells are located, which are conceived as shared spaces for pairs or smaller groups. Each of these cells contains two armchairs and a smaller height-adjustable desk that allows for working while sitting or standing, while also being complemented by two narrow lockable metal lockers. The individual cells are separated from each other by acoustic panels, which ensure a quiet environment without making the space feel enclosed or cramped.
